Canner. Unfortunately, she's discovered that the modern shopper, while she is buying, usually does so in grab-it-and-run mode. So the owners remind people of the store's original mission—to put a little love back into the oft alienating late-capitalist exchange—by throwing parties. Their sound system epitomizes the vibe of these warmly hip events: It's a reproduction of a nineteenth-century phonograph converted into an amplifier for their iPod by pal Blackie Pagano, who owns the neighboring custom stereo design shop Tubesville.

Phoenix and Canner have known each other since middle school in Gainesville, Florida. They hooked up with Whitmire
